Summary

I have worked in the computer and education field for over 20 years. My work experiences have been provided me with a rich practical experience of how the computer/ICT can be effectively implemented in the education system. My PhD research has increased my awareness of the interactive teaching approach, how to use ICT affordances to aid teachers' teaching practice when teaching in an E-learning environment, and how to assess the effectiveness of ICT implementation in the education system.

I have become specialist in implementing ICT/E-learning in education system and developing professional training programmes focusing on ICT affordances, the interactive teaching approach, blended & e-learning strategies, and building learning content and instructional design. I have also gained specialist knowledge of informal learning and collaborative online learning and how to evaluate the effectiveness of using technology within the learning context.

As a researcher, my aim is to continue to contribute to the field of E-learning focusing on using ICT affordances to support the Interactive Teaching approach. My aim is also to further the strategic planning and implementation of successful ICT usage in the workplace
